Conclusion

(main paragraph)

The popularity of fast food restaurants is increasing day by day mainly due to social media's influence, lucrative presentation and lower number of hangout places. Firstly, social media is a major factor behind the growing popularity of fast food restaurants. Since in the age of massive social media influence many people are taking food blogging as their source of income, they try to promote foods of several fast food chains commercially. Also, the alluring presentation of foods attracts customers. Through their own social media handles and food bloggers the fast food production companies advertise their products in a much more lucrative way than they actually are. Furthermore, the scarcity of adequate places for get-together influences the rise of fast food restaurant culture. In the urban life, concrete is occupying more places, therefore greeneries and nature are getting replaced by restaurants as the places of hangout. People are growingly relying on these restaurants to meet and chat with their friends and even for family get-togethers. In conclusion, the significant impact of social media, commercialization of food items and less opportunity to hangout are some major reasons influencing the growth of fast food restaurant culture.
