Conclusion

(Main Essay)

Family is one of the most important social institutions. This institution plays a significant role in shaping an individual’s mind and identity. I disagree with this statement as, in my opinion, joint families are more beneficial since they foster cooperation and children’s social skills.

Undoubtedly, members of the joint families are cooperative. In terms of financial cooperation, all of them contribute to the wellbeing of their family.. Moreover, these members extend their emotional support to each other during challenging times.

Secondly, joint families promote children’s social skills. The members of such families participate in various works collaboratively which inspire the children to be more social. Furthermore, joint families contribute actively to the enhancement of children’s ability to communicate as the members keep interacting with them regarding different situations every now and then.

Despite the benefits of joint families, majority of the people are avid supporters of nuclear families as such families provide immense freedom in decision making. However, in spite of offering such importance on individuality, I strongly believe that joint families contribute more to a person’s overall development.

To conclude, although the concept of nuclear family is much more popular in the modern time, joint families still carry their own glory due to the promotion of teamwork and overall social skills.
