Conclusion

(main essay)

Nowadays, restaurants have become common places for social gathering. Since urban areas are gradually turning into the 'concrete jungle' gradually, people can not help choosing restaurants for chit chat and social get-togethers. Keeping this in mind, restaurants are growing in number in various places of the big cities of Bangladesh. Madchef and Terracotta are two restaurants in my area which differ in ambience and types of food/cuisine, however, they are similar in the point of customer satisfaction.

To begin with, Madchef has western ambience and various types of food. In Madchef, the ambience consists of soft western music; the furniture and the decor offer a modern atmosphere. In terms of food, a range of delicacies are available there including pasta, garlic mashrooms, burger etc. The environment provides the elegance of the urban world.

On the other hand, Terracotta serves traditional food and the atmosphere is traditional here as well. If people go to Terracotta, they will find hanging bamboo lights and cozy sitting arrangements on the rooftop, ideal for 'Adda' or chitchatting with friends. Moreover, Terracotta serves traditional dishes representing Bengali culture. The food items include rice, mashed potato, beef khichuri, phuchka etc. In this case, the visitors experience the coziness of a homely environment.

Despite having distinctions, both restaurants have positive customer review. Terracotta, due to the comfort of the traditional Bengali atmosphere, is widely adored by the city people. In a similar vein, Madchef is popular among the urban crowd for hosting a variety of western food items, rendering it possible for them to taste delicacies from different cultures.

To conclude, although Madchef and Terracota offer two different kinds of impression with regard to food and ambience, both of them share a harmonious bond in terms of being admired by the visitors. (295 words) (In exam, the word limit has to be 300-350 words)
